Service-learning is defined as applying to a community the theories, concepts, and skills learned in a course. This is done in a way that provides practical service for another individual or group. Because service-learning is individualized and context-specific, grading the student's success in the activity may be somewhat subjective. However, there are some components that serve as useful indicators in almost all service-learning experiences.

Thank you for taking the time to complete this evaluation. Your feedback will serve as an excellent learning tool for the student.
